

LOCAL PHARISEEISM.

LOCAL AND GENERAL

A LIEUTENANT in the forces at Tuyen-Qi Tonquin, named Chaudoreille, was shot other day, whilst out shooting. A companion gun caught on a rice-stem, and the charge entered Chaudoreille's head.

three eggs or theriac, bread, molasses, etc. breakfast; beef, potatoes, vegetables, and fish for dinner, with pork and any odds and ends for supper. They are given just as much as they eat. They are scrupulously honest and peaceable among themselves. They only kill one scruple, and that is with regard to their horses; this they will not hate cut under any condition. They have been visited by a good many people, and are, as a result, well provided with cigars and tobacco, together with a variety of wine.

M. Costa had been a slash over the ear, but was getting better. He (the writer) was black and blue through the blows showered on him. It was also improving. Their chief discomfort was travelling: barefooted, having only one pair of shoes among the three men. Their Chinese "boonies," Annamite servants were with them and had, had been of much assistance. They were still plying over the amount of ransom when he wrote. Mr. Rogue's Anamite servant also wrote, saying that the prisoners had been carried off far into the forest, and no knew when they would get back. His master was very tired and feeble, and he had to stop help him, otherwise he (his boy) could get away. The same messengers carried back Lin-yu's statement. The Resident at Haiduong afterwards paid for a ransom, taking $7,000 for Mr. Rogue's release. Lin-yu insists on being pardoned and granted a concession as part of this ransom.

2.—A lot on the easels of Hospital grounds being offered for sale it was represented that

that characterises the sex, to minister angels to their suffering sisters in favoured climes. China has received fair portion of these estimable ladies, and have favoured this city by their advent.

There being no further business the meeting was adjourned by the Chairman.
